The above is a fair representation of a good horse become diseased, before his owner had learned of the efficiency of Fogg's ... Remedies. See what L. A. Buck, owner of Blooded Stock and proprietor of Buck's Shoe Factory, Bangor says in regard to G. M. Remedies:

BANGOR, Dec. 24, 1891.

Geo. M. Fogg. Dear sir—In answer to your request I state that my stallion Black Hawk Wilkes was in poor flesh and we found it impossible to improve his condition. His coat was rough and his food came from him in an undigested state. The stableman obtained a box of your Horse powders and commenced giving them to him. In ten weeks he gained over 100 pounds. He expelled over fifty bots, that worms, from eight to twelve inches in length, that we know of, and probably many more. I consider them an invaluable remedy. Yours respectfully, L. A. BUCK.

I can show testimonials from all the leading horsemen in Eastern Maine, similar to the above.

EXPECTED WOULD BE DIFFERENT.

Mrs. Judkins Arraigned for Murdering Her Son.

She is Remanded to Jail Without Bail.

BOSTON, Jan. 3. Mrs. Annie G. Judkins, who, yesterday shot and killed her infant son, was arraigned in Roxbury District Court to-day. In pleading guilty to the charge Mrs. Judkins said: "I'm guilty of murdering him. I didn't expect him to go alone. I expected it would be different. My only plea is that I am guilty." Judge Bolster explained that she should plead not guilty, so that she might avail herself of any defense. She said: "I am not guilty of being malicious." The Judge ordered the clerk to enter the plea of not guilty, and then remanded Mrs. Judkins without bail for the grand jury. As far as can be learned, neither her husband nor any of her friends were in court or took the slightest interest in her behalf.

GOVERNOR FLOWER'S INAUGURAL.

Some Important Matters Treated in His Address.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 3. Governor Flower presented his annual message to the Legislature to-day. The State, he says, has financial obligations amounting to $460,000 and the treasury balance of $1,701,487.

Touching the Buffalo strike the Governor announces the expenditure by the State to have been $192,647, and then adds: The employes have a right to strike and peaceably persuade others to join them, and in their earnest and lawful efforts to benefit their condition they may always feel sure that public sympathy is with them and against selfish corporations, but every citizen and corporation, every employe and employer must observe and respect the authority of law and government. It should be the aim of the law making body to see that our laws confer equal privileges. It is not right that powers should be granted to corporations to oppress either their employes or the people, whatever can be wisely done by legislation to guarantee

Equal Rights to All, Should be Done.

But the law will not accomplish everything. Corporations will learn by costly experience that even from the selfish point of view it pays to be considerate of the welfare of their employes. No men or corporations can stop the march of civilization. Shorter hours of labor, better wages and the opportunity which these give for education and enjoyment are natural human aspirations. They should be treated as such in a friendly Christian spirit, not repelled with an arrogant manner or impatient consideration. An honest recognition by corporations, of just demands from employes, will solve many a labor difficulty and prevent many an opportunity for lawless strife and Civil Disorder.

Dealing with the law against "sweatshops" and its results, the Governor says: "The present law doesn't go far enough to remedy all evils which have grown up under this system." The Governor urges the passage of a carefully guarded enactment. Attention is given to election bribery, and the Governor wants the corrupt practices act extended to affect political agents and committees; and he urges such legislation as will make proof of bribery on the part of candidates or their political agents or committees, sufficient cause for forfeiture of office.

On the subject of quarantine, Gov Flower says: I confess I am not yet convinced that that old fashioned Jeffersonian theory of self government must be laid aside for the adoption of a centralized government exercising a great variety of functions which the state or the people can best discharge for themselves. I question whether the people of this State would intrust so important a matter as preservation of the public health to the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government.

I am not Opposed to National quarantine, but to an exclusive National quarantine, such as is urged in contemporary discussion. There is a field in which the Federal Government must exercise quarantine powers, the place to detain cholera is on the other side of the ocean, not in New York bay. A rigid system of inspection at foreign ports, under direction of the consular service would form the best kind of National quarantine. As for the rest it can safely be left to the State jurisdiction and control of State authorities.

Gov. Tuttle, of New Hampshire, Decides to Pardon Sylvester W. Cone.

CONCORD, N. H., Jan. 3. Governor Tuttle and Council have decided to pardon from the State prison Sylvester W. Cone, of Tamworth, who was committed in November, 1876, for thirty years. Young boys were in the habit of bathing in a pond near Cone's house. He several times threatened the boys with punishment if they continued the practice, and one day lost his temper, took his gun and fired at the boys in the water, killing one of them. Cone is 48 years old, and has been an exemplary prisoner.

Rev. Dr. McGlynn Restored to the Catholic Church.

Some Monkery Used at Time of the Controversy.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3. The Herald says Rev. Dr. McGlynn has been welcomed back into the fold of the Catholic church, simply because the Pope considered an injustice was done him when he was excommunicated. Archbishop Corrigan's charges against Dr. McGlynn, of disobedience and preaching false doctrines, have not been acted upon at all by Monseignor Satolli, in restoring Dr. McGlynn to his full powers as a priest. These charges will hang over the head of Dr. McGlynn, but it is extremely doubtful if they will ever be pushed. The case will probably never be reopened. An ecclesiastic who occupies a high position in the Arch-Diocese, says a letter which Dr. McGlynn had despatched to Rome at the time of the controversy, had been suppressed and declares that the letter had been burned by a high ecclesiastic into whose hands it was given to be transmitted to the Pope. Had this letter reached the Pope, it was said, Dr. McGlynn would not have been excommunicated. The doctor did not know that the letter had been miscarried and was surprised to find himself excommunicated. The Pope did not learn until long after the Doctor had been excommunicated that he had sent a letter to him. When he did find it out he had Cardinal Simeoni write to Rev. Dr. Burtsell, Dr. McGlynn's counsel, a letter, in which he stated in specific terms that had the letter been received the "scandal" would have been averted.

A BACKWARD TURN.

Mr. Blaine's Condition not so Favorable as it Had Been.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3. Mr. Blaine's condition has taken a backward turn, but the change is probably not of a character to excite serious apprehensions, for the physicians of the distinguished patient were not summoned in haste as has been the custom when Mr. Blaine became worse. Dr Johnston made his regular call at the Blaine residence shortly before 11. When the reporter saw him at his residence he was preparing to visit Mr. Blaine, and did not seem alarmed over the information imparted by the reporter that Mr. Blaine's butler had stated this morning that Mr. Blaine had passed an uncomfortable night and was not feeling so well. For the past two days Mr. Blaine has suffered from constipation, and yesterday his condition was not so favorable as it had been for several days preceding.

At this the two Aldermen withdrew.

Annual Reports of the Secretary and Treasurer.

The following are the reports of the Secretary, Mrs. Mary L. Patten, and the Treasurer, Miss Kate B. Walker, delivered at the annual meeting held yesterday afternoon:

Ladies:

Having served as your Secretary for twenty-one years in succession, and made a report each year, at our last annual meeting I consented to serve one year more with the understanding, as I supposed, that I should not be required to make another report. At this I was much gratified, as I had been over essentially the same ground so often, I realized that in trying to make another, it would be much like thrashing old straw which would yield no grain, and bearing in mind the old adage that the same story told too often by the same person becomes commonplace and uninteresting. But the President, whose will is supreme, wishes that I shall make one more trial, and lest it might seem that I had lost my interest in a good cause, I have consented to do what I can.

If I fail to interest you, it will be quite as much the fault of our President as of myself. There are many persons outside of our number who are perhaps, as any one of us, and who are ready and willing to reach out the helping hand to shelter and protect those children who have no home, and are growing up amid scenes of suffering and vicious surroundings, who would like to understand as to some of the details of our Home; I will say that it moves on in the same way as for many years past, with its doors always open to assist those children who are neglected, or suffering in any way, and we strive, as far as in our power, to show to them the beauty and happiness of home life, and we will not doubt that He who notes the sparrow's fall will provide for those children who are now under your charge, or who may hereafter be, in His own good way.

At the commencement of the year there were in the Home twenty-eight girls and twenty-three boys. During the year, nine girls and three boys entered, and seven girls and five boys left, leaving at the home fifty-two children. Some of these children who were taken into the Home to relieve the parents have been returned to them, as they are now able to support them, while others have had homes provided for them by the Managers. There have been no severe cases of sickness during the year, which is very remarkable, considering the number of children, whose ages vary from fourteen to two years. The Home has done all that could be done to supply the place of parents who are what nature intended them to be.

The work of the Home is not sectarian; nearly all of the different denominations are represented on the Board of Managers, who are interested in caring for and saving homeless children. All through New England, and, indeed, the whole country, are awakening to the importance of caring for children.

The school and Kindergarten are in a prosperous condition. Miss Madeline Giddings, who, by nature and education, is well adapted for the purpose, formed a band of "King's Daughters," of eight of the girls and, we are highly gratified that she has met with so much success. No one can tell the influence that may go out from even the smallest band to bless the world.

Our Matron, feeling the need of rest, resigned her position in December. To fill the position of Matron properly, one should have a genuine love for children, should have a sound body, have courage and patience.

Since our last meeting, two of the highly esteemed and valuable members of your Board, Mrs. Gammons and Mrs. Tillson, have passed to a higher, and, as we trust, to a better life. As the managers of our Home are fast being gathered into that "great multitude" whom no man can number, we trust that others will be prepared to take the places of those who have yielded up their stewardship and have left a sweet memory behind.

I am quite sure that every member of your Board is much rejoiced that a former member, Mrs. Samuel R. Prentiss, after an absence of ten years, has returned to the city, and is ready and willing, once more, to enter upon the good work which she so well accomplished before she left us.

While many have labored so zealously and made such liberal donations for our benefit, I feel sure that you will pardon me for saying that Madame Prentiss has been one of the foremost of this number. She has long been one of our most faithful friends, and, from her abundance, has never withheld what she judged to be useful for our prosperity. I recall now to mind that, during the past year, she has donated a very valuable clock, besides other articles, and only a few years past, presented the library with the "British Cyclopædia," a most valuable work of twelve volumes.

I presume that the Trustees will take all necessary means to obtain the usual appropriation from the State for our benefit.

Mr. G. W. Merrill, who has for so many years rendered valuable service in teaching the children singing on Sabbath afternoons, and who has done so much in other directions for the prosperity of the Home, is entitled to more thanks than can readily be expressed. His memory will be cherished by those who have watched his untiring devotion, long after his labors here shall have ceased.

During last year Mrs. H. H. Fogg, Mrs. S. H. Dale, Mrs. Charles Stetson, Miss Emily Stetson and Mr. Gilbert L. Leighton, each contributed twenty-five dollars to become Life Members. The managers are not only thankful for such liberality; but are especially gratified that it gives evidence that they repose confidence in them and are satisfied with the entire management of everything pertaining to the Home, which requires great care and watchfulness. The many friends who have contributed money, clothing, and many other useful and valuable articles, are entitled to our warmest thanks.

Mrs. W. H. Strickland sent as a donation at Christmas, seventy pieces of valuable dinner set. The Central church sent their usual donation of five dollars. Mr. Deutney, the temperance lecturer gave several books for the Library, and has invited the children to entertainments at Norombega hall.

Thanksgiving day, Hon. J. P. Bass sent five turkeys; the Hammond Street Sabbath School sent various valuable gifts.

Christmas day, kind friends made preparation for a delightful time for the children. For twenty years Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Merrill have provided a Christmas tree, but this Christmas it was omitted, and instead, a genuine Santa Claus, in the person of Dr. Alfred Walton, made his appearance and gave the children great pleasure by the abundant and useful presents which he bestowed.

It has often been said that filth and crime go hand in hand. If so, surely, cleanliness of person and surroundings are valuable aids in enforcing lessons of morality. If the children leave the Home with higher ideas of truth, morality, and cleanliness, much has been accomplished towards fitting them for the battles of life, which all must encounter to some extent.

It is pleasant to reflect that so far as we have means of knowing, all public comments upon our work has been favorable, and as the years go by our faith in the good work which this society accomplishes remains undiminished.

We have had failures, but are not discouraged. We now enter upon another year of labor with full confidence that it will not retrograde, but go on towards the ideal which we shall strive to reach hereafter.

WOMAN'S KINGDOM.

Some Historical Examples of Courage and Fidelity.

[Chicago Inter Ocean.]

There died recently a woman who, during one of the battles of the civil war, rescued the flag from the enemy and held it aloft, in a rain of bullets, undaunted in the face of death. It is now known that hundreds of women, from various motives, donned the uniform of the volunteer, shouldered a musket and marched to the front. Miss Carroll's services are still a matter of debate in Congress, and she will eventually secure substantial justice and the reward that she so richly merited.

History is full of examples of womanly heroism. There has been no political crisis in which they, too, have not toiled and suffered, walking to the stake, laying their heads upon the block and ascending the steps of the gallows without a tremor. In many straits it has been women who have inspired and encouraged the men, showing how heroism may rise superior to physical limitations, and fearlessness remain undaunted to the end. There are few who are not familiar with the story of "Elizabeth, or the Exile of Siberia," but there are not many who know that the author, Madame Sophie Cottin, was not only a woman of genius but a patriot whose sympathy for distress made her risk her own life without a question or hesitation.

She was a widow, young and beautiful, and who, mourning her husband, inconsolable, retired from the world and, in her strict seclusion, devoted herself to her literary work. While the reign of terror was at its height, a man whose name was on the proscribed list, but who was personally unknown to her, appealed to her for aid. He was in hiding, doomed to the guillotine should he be arrested. To assist him meant, in case of detection, arrest and death for herself. But, notwithstanding this, she went to work at once to complete an unfinished story that she might have money for him when he came. While thus engaged she was surprised by a domiciliary visit from the gens d'arms. The compromising letter lay upon her desk. With wonderful presence of mind she explained that she was a literary woman engaged in her usual occupation, and offered to read a portion of what she had written. They were soldiers themselves and she read with all the dramatic power she possessed the entire manuscript so far as it had been completed. They were charmed and gratified, and went away refraining from searching the papers, or molesting her in any way.

In all the brilliant examples of those who perished for love of country, none takes precedence of Marie Jeanne Roland. Throughout her imprisonment, at the foot of the scaffold, under the very blade of the fatal knife, her quenchless spirit never faltered. She died as she had lived, an example to the faint-hearted, an inspiration to those less resolute than herself.

Among the aides-de-camp of Napoleon was Marie Chemans Lavalette. Wishing to reward his bravery the Emperor gave him in marriage Emelie Beauharnais, a favorite niece of the Empress Josephine. The young wife and husband were devotedly attached to each other. After Napoleon's downfall and the Bourbons were restored to their former power, Count Lavalette was arrested and sentenced to death. The young wife vainly interceded for his pardon. Finally she obtained permission to visit him the night before his execution, and persuaded him to put on her dress, conceal his face, and so escape. The stratagem was successful. But the wife, detained as a prisoner, spent twenty days and nights of such harrowing suspense that she became insane, and although her husband was finally restored to her, she never recovered her reason.

In the American Revolution, the preservation of Washington's army, massed at Valley Forge, was due to the ...

GRANT MAUSOLEUM.

To be Built of Maine Granite by a Maine Company.

An Important Contract Awarded to the Maine and New Hampshire Granite Company

The contract for the erection of the mausoleum in which are finally to repose the remains of General U. S. Grant, has been awarded to the Maine & New Hampshire Granite Company. This contract involves about $250,000, and two years is allowed for the completion of the work. It is not probable, however, that so long a time will be needed.

Aside from the money involved, this award will prove in other important respects of great value, not only to the company which has secured it but to the industrial interests of Maine. The completed work is to be magnificent and elaborate and will be a perpetual reminder of the quality of the material and skill in workmanship controlled by the company which is to erect it.

It may well be believed that the Grant Monument Association realized from the outset that posterity as well as its own day and generation would demand that a memorial to the greatest soldier of modern times, should be, in material and workmanship, the best that the country could produce, and that no effort should be spared to arrive at the right conclusion upon both points. In full knowledge of that responsibility, the decision has been favorable to a Maine quarry and Maine workmanship.

The gentlemen having immediate charge of the duty of deciding among the contestants for the work, took unusual precautions that no mistake should be made in these particulars. From the inception of the matter it has been understood that other considerations than the number of dollars mentioned therein should have weight in deciding among the several bids.

No Granite was to be Accepted, at whatever price, that could not stand the tests to which it was to be subjected. These tests were as to strength and durability and the liability to deterioration by time from staining and other causes. As to the former particular the trial was had at the United States Arsenal, at Watertown, N. Y., and an analysis was made at Harvard college to determine the other points. The result of these tests being satisfactory, Gen. Horace Porter, the president, and Mr. Duncan, the architect of the Grant Monument association, visited the North Jay quarry and satisfied themselves of the facilities for performing the work. Then the award was made. The North Jay granite is white. The Cleaves monument on our Eastern promenade is a sample of its shade and texture and proves its non-liability to stains.

A decision reached after such tests and care cannot fail to be of great assistance to the Maine and New Hampshire Granite company in the weight it will have in the decision of other competitions in which it is and is likely to be engaged.

This company, though a local one, is better known perhaps outside than in this State. Its stock is owned by Payson Tucker, Esq., its vice president and treasurer, by Asa Cushman, Esq., of Auburn, and the estate of the late George W. Wagg. It owns in addition to the North Jay quarry that at Redstone, N. H., practically a Maine industry as it is just across the Fryeburg line and draws its supplies from Portland. The superintendent is James P. Murphy, who divides his time between the quarries.

Though the Redstone is the newer quarry it has recently attracted the most attention. Five years ago nothing but a wilderness was to be found where now is a hive of busy industry. Where only the foxes then dwelt a village has grown up, with depot, telegraph offices, postoffice, dwellings, boarding houses and stores, one of which transacts a business of $50,000 a year. Its supply of granite is inexhaustible, and the greater the amount of work it has to do the more economically and profitably it can be done. The company has now on hand a $97,000 contract for the banking house of Wm. Peet & Co., in New York, and others to the amount of $500,000, which will give employment to 600 men.

The Redstone Quarry Not Only

produces the red granite so well known in this vicinity but a green granite as well. This latter has recently been adopted by the United States for the basements and first stories of the public buildings as less liable to defacement and discoloration. The Northwestern Loan and Guarantee company, of Minneapolis, is built after this plan, the stone for the lower stories of which, to the value of $100,000, came from the Redstone quarry. The whole building is said to have cost more than $1,000,000.

Among other buildings it has erected is the Lester store in Chicago said to be the largest single store in the world, the City Hall and Memorial Building and the Boston & Maine depot in Lowell, Mass. The Real Estate Exchange in Brooklyn, N. Y., the Women's Temple in Chicago, besides several private dwellings there, one that of Mr. Lynch is said in point of carving to be the finest in the country. Then there is a large bank building in Mainstee, Michigan, and another in Des Moines, Iowa, besides many other elegant buildings in various cities of the country. Nearer home are several buildings in Boston including a new apartment house in Blackstone square, erected by Thomas Bart, Esq., of the Boston & Maine railroad, to say nothing of the elegant Union station in this city so familiar to us all.

It is not generally understood that the contracts taken include not only the quarrying and the preparation of the stones, but the actual putting them together in their places in the completed structure, for which purpose men are sent under competent overseers to the point where the building is to be erected.

The waste resulting from this large work finds its way into curbing, paving blocks, etc., for the streets of New York, Cincinnati, and other western, as well as our own Maine cities. Over 1,000,000 blocks were shipped last season to New York alone, and of that number, inspected here in Portland by men sent from New York for the purpose, less than 3,000 were thrown out as imperfect.

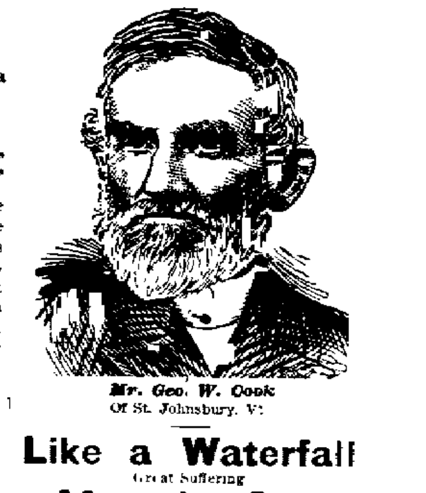

With Such Facilities

and such material, with the business energy, enterprise and capital behind it, it is not unsafe to predict that the Maine and New Hampshire Granite company is destined to become one of the most important, as it is one of the most successful enterprises in the State. Its promise of profit is in and of itself a sufficient impetus to its management, which has, however, in addition thereto, the great satisfaction of knowing that it is contributing to the wealth, prosperity and general happiness of our people through the employment it affords to so many who otherwise would seek for it elsewhere.

Meanwhile the people of Maine may well be pleased that through the enterprise of her citizens her hills are to furnish ...

The Legislature.

The Maine Legislature will meet to-day, but after the organization of the two Houses and the inauguration of the Governor an adjournment will probably be taken until next week in order to allow time for the formation of the various committees. Politically the Senate stands—Republicans thirty, Democrats one, House, Republicans one hundred and seven, Democrats forty-four. It is said that the new material in the Legislature is larger than for a good many years past.

A United States Senator is to be elected at this session and several matters of legislation are being discussed. The question of taxation is one that will doubtless occupy a considerable share of attention and some of the changes likely to be offered promise to afford the basis of a sharp contest.

Immediately after the election it was suggested that the friends of the Australian ballot law would come in with several amendments but since the Massachusetts fiasco the subject has been dropped. It is only fair to assume that in view of the evidence of the utter failure of the law in the Bay State, where a Governor owes his election to the mistakes made by the voters by reason of the complicated election machinery the champions of the law in this State have concluded that it will be wiser for them to let the question alone. We have no means of knowing what action, if any, the Legislature will take, but we unhesitatingly express the opinion that the most sensible course will be to repeal the law. We also express the opinion that such a course would receive the approval of the great majority of the people of the State.

The caucuses last evening were very harmonious and resulted in the nomination of Hon. A. M. Spear of Gardiner, for President of the Senate by acclamation. Mr Spear is a graduate of Bates College is forty years of age and has been a practicing lawyer since 1878. In 1889 he was Mayor of Gardiner and was re-elected in 1890 '91 and '92. In 1891 he was elected to the House of Representatives and served on the Committee on Legal Affairs and Revision of the Statutes. In 1893 he was again elected to the Legislature serving as chairman of the Committee on Legal Affairs.

The House caucus resulted in the nomination of Hon. A. P. Savage of Auburn, by acclamation. Mr Savage is a graduate of Dartmouth College class of '71 and is a lawyer by profession. He was County Attorney for Androscoggin county from 1881 to 1885, Judge of Probate 1885 to 1889, Mayor of Auburn in 1889-1890 was a member of the last House.

The nomination in each case is equivalent to an election and will be promptly ratified by the two houses to-day.

Governor elect Cleaves will be inaugurated Thursday in the presence of the members of both houses and his inaugural address will be printed in full in The Whig Friday morning.

Getting More Interesting.

The struggle between the Hill Murphy machine and the Cleveland machine over the spoils of the recent Democratic victory in New York is becoming more interesting with every new move. The latest phase of the case is an interview with Hon John Bigelow who was Secretary of State under Governor Tilden. Mr Bigelow evidently has a keen appreciation of the prevailing characteristics of the President elect and he expresses his opinion with a degree of candor that will be positively shocking to the Mugwumps. He says:

It reminds me of the remark which Cousin the eminent French philosopher, made when Pio Nono issued his famous encyclical against the Scientists in 1864. What a grand opportunity the Holy Father has lost—of keeping silent. It is practically giving public notice to all the friends of Mr Murphy and Senator Hill that he regards them as hostiles. It is also what is far worse in a moral point of view a warning to every member of the Legislature that none who votes for Murphy need look for a welcome at the White House or any favors at the hands of the President-elect. As the duty of selecting Senators in Congress has been confided by the Constitution of our State to its legislative bodies and not to the President, most will think it would have been more decorous to leave to his friends and partisans the business of pelting Mr Murphy.

In thus wantonly taking the field in person against Mr Murphy, I think Mr Cleveland has exposed himself unnecessarily to the suspicion of wishing to interfere with the independence of the Legislature of designing to exert an undue and corrupting influence over that body, a suspicion that would be no less unfortunate for his personal reputation than unfavorable to the ends he sought to accomplish by it. I am not aware that anything worse than this has ever been imputed to Mr Murphy by his most implacable enemies. They say that he is the head of the State machine, but that is at least a machine with many heads. Mr Cleveland on the other hand, talks as if he were promising to erect himself into a machine with a single head. There is safety in numbers, they say, and if we must have a machine, let it at least be a polycephalic rather than a monocephalic machine.

Not satisfied with this, Mr Bigelow proceeds to ridicule the alleged reason given by the President-elect for his opposition to Murphy namely, that he is not a man familiar with public affairs. He declares that his knowledge in this respect is considerably greater than Mr Cleveland's when he was elected Governor," and then gives a thrust at the Mugwumps who have had a good deal to say about the scholar in politics, by remarking that Mr Murphy is a college bred man, "an advantage of which, whatever it may be worth," Mr Cleveland does not boast.

He then proceeds to give Murphy's candidacy a boom by stating that "he was a devoted and most efficient supporter of Gov Tilden in all his reforms and enjoyed the Governor's entire confidence and his friendship to the end of his life." This reference to the deceased idol of New York Democracy places Mr. Cleveland in a very trying position. But Mr Bigelow again applies the knife in the decidedly sarcastic remark that the Tammany candidate "has never been charged with abusing any of his public trusts for private and personal ends," and concludes the interview as follows:

This is not the sort of man, I think, upon whom it is fit to let loose the hungry hounds and parasites that swarm around the ...

election of a speaker of the House who will appoint a Ways and Means Committee that will accept the administration tariff bill and put it through the House. The third object Mr. Cleveland has in view is the organization of the United States Senate so that his measure can get through that body, and that is why he wants a man from New York who will be his mouthpiece instead of a man like Murphy who would be more apt to be his opponent. And this is also why he wants Mr. Bayard in the Senate. This programme of Mr. Cleveland's of course, contemplates his assuming practically not only the executive, but the legislative powers of the Government. But Mr. Cleveland seems to feel that he is equal to that emergency.

If he could be sure that Mr. Crisp would do his bidding as Speaker, it is probable that all opposition to the re-election of the Georgia member to his present office would disappear. That is said here to have been the reason that Mr. Cleveland sought an interview with Mr. Crisp, and, according to an intimate friend of the Speaker, who has seen and conversed with him since his return to Washington, the Speaker assured Mr Cleveland that he would be in entire harmony with him, but he could not promise that the administration tariff bill could be put through the House without change.

He suggested to the President-elect that the better way would be to call an extra session of the House in March for organization, and then to appoint the Ways and Means Committee and allow it to frame a tariff bill with the aid of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which event he suggested that it would be much easier to get the measure through the House. But Mr. Cleveland declared that he did not want an extra session unless it was unavoidable for other reasons, and the two statesmen, according to this friend, while talking the matter over in a very frank manner, did not reach a point of agreement.

The great WASTE of water threatens the entire suspension of water from breaking down of the pumps. During the last twenty-four hours more water was pumped than ever before in the same time, an average of 186 gallons per head in 24 hours. The average in the city of New Bedford is only 35 gallons per head.

The works are unable, with such waste, to supply the houses on the elevations. The occupants complain, and justly.

Consider the condition if the pumps should give out. There is a limit, even to iron.

CHAIRMAN CARTER REFUTES

Denies Implication Against Himself and Mr McComas.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3. Chairman Carter, of the Republican National Committee, was here to-day, under subpœna from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate subcommittee. This committee has begun to take testimony in relation to the charges made against Louis McComas, who was nominated for Judge of the Supreme Court for the District of Columbia. One allegation in the case is that Mr. McComas, while counsel for a man named Gibson, who was representing certain interests in the Yellowstone Park Association, proposed to his client to influence the land office, through the commissioner, then Mr. Carter, if the necessary funds were forthcoming. Mr. Carter to-day gave the testimony which, it is understood, strongly negatives the implication that there was any wrong doing in the matter within his knowledge.

GALLIA-UMBRIA INCIDENT.

Capt. Ferguson of the Gallia Explains Why He Failed to Give Assistance.

LONDON, Jan. 3. The Cunard Company have issued an official statement of the Gallia-Umbria incident. In this statement Capt. Ferguson of the Gallia says that when his steamer approached the Umbria, the latter was lying like a duck in the water and formed a perfect picture of security while the Gallia was rolling heavily. On reading the signal "shaft broken," Capt. Ferguson consulted with his chief engineer.

The latter officer knowing the appliances which were on board the Umbria, and being intimately acquainted with Chief Engineer Tomlinson, as was also Capt. Ferguson himself, the latter was satisfied from the next signal, "Ready to to proceed to-morrow," that the Umbria was in no danger whatever, and that there were some weeks more provisions on board for all the passengers and crew.

Capt. Ferguson, the report continues, had to consider his own position, with the prospect of easterly weather leaving him an insufficient margin in his coal supply, should he, it states, have expended a considerable portion of his fuel in standing by the Umbria for one and probably two days.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

A Tragedy in a Flat on Tremont street in Boston.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 3. Late this afternoon at 412 Tremont street, Louis Wagner shot and killed Mrs. Fanny Speir and then committed suicide. Mrs. Speir and daughter, aged 8, rented a suite at the above location. She called on no one in the house and those in the building hardly knew them. The day after their arrival Wagner called at the house, and has since lived with them. To inquiries Wagner said he resided at 49 Webster avenue, Chelsea. In the suite above lived Miss Phillips.

This afternoon she heard a noise below that sounded like the tumbling over of a table. Five minutes later Nellie Speir came into the hall and said "Mamma has called me, but I cannot get into the room. Won't you come and help me?" Miss Phillips asked what was the matter and the child replied: "That man stopping with us called mamma into the back room a few minutes ago, saying he wanted to tell her something. Mamma went in there and I Heard a Noise Like Thunder.

I heard it twice, then mamma called me. I went to the door, but could not get in." Miss Phillips tried the door but it was locked. A policeman was called and forced the door of the room. Lying in the room was the body of Mrs. Speir. Three feet away was Wagner's body and beside it lay a revolver from which two bullets were fired. Jealousy was the probable cause.

LUMBER SURVEYORS.

At the Port of Bangor in the Year 1893.

We are indebted to Surveyor General

A GENEROUS GIFT.

H. H. Fogg, Esq., Gives $2,500 for a New Cottage at Good Will Home.

Good Will Home, at East Fairfield, is widely known as a most worthy institution for boys and it is constantly growing. Bangor people will be interested and pleased to learn that its usefulness is still further to be increased by a generous gift of $2,500, from H. H. Fogg, Esq., of this city, who has just drawn his check for that amount which will be used for the erection of a new cottage.

The gift was unsolicited and showed Mr. Fogg's interest and faith in the institution. Rev. G. W. Hinckley, who has charge of the Home, has been in this city this week and returns to Fairfield much pleased with the excellent New Year's present, which will enable the institution to extend its very praiseworthy work to a very considerable extent.

The new cottage will be begun in the spring and will be completed as soon as possible, due care, of course, being given to substantialness and adaptability to the uses to which it will be put. It will accommodate fifteen boys and there is no question but that its accommodations will be tested at once, as there are always many applications. The boys at the Home are given practical instruction of every kind and good citizens are made of boys who would otherwise go to the bad.

The cottage which Mr. C. M. Bailey is now building at the farm, is up and covered. It is to be completed April 1st. Before it is completed the cottage to be built through Mr. Fogg's generosity, will be commenced.

Good Will Home has many and influential friends and it promises to be one of the most important institutions for good in the country. There is no telling to what extent it may grow.

Mr. Scribner retires with the high esteem of the members of the board as well as the people at large with whom he has had dealings in any way.

Mr. Hammond, the new member of the board, is a resident of Milford. He has for years had charge of timber lands and has done much surveying. He has many qualifications which well fit him for the position to which he has been elected and he will without doubt perform his duties in an able manner. CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL

At the Unitarian Memorial Parlors Tuesday Evening.

It is an annual custom of the Unitarian society to have a Christmas festival for the young people especially, and the event of this character which occurred last evening at the Memorial Parlors, was one of the most pleasant that has ever been held. There was a large attendance of the members of the parish and the children and all enjoyed themselves very much.

At 6.30 a delicious supper was served at the tables placed about the sides of the rooms and the young ladies who waited upon the tables performed their duties very efficiently.

After supper a short time was passed in conversation and the remainder of the time was devoted to dancing which was fully enjoyed by all. Gen. Charles W. Roberts was floor manager. Excellent music was furnished by Mr. George E. Cushing and members of the boy's orchestra.

Bangor Boy Promoted.

The many friends in this city of Mr. Sabin P. Sanger, of Boston, formerly of Bangor, will be pleased to learn that Monday he was admitted to the banking firm of Curtis & Motley, 62 State street, Boston. Mr. Sanger is a graduate of Harvard and for ten years after graduation he was with the banking firm of Blake Brothers, State street, Boston, where he gave evidence of much financial ability and gained valuable experience. For the past two years he has been with Curtis & Motley and their appreciation of his services is well shown by his admission to

FACED A REVOLVER.

Officer Jacobs Has an Unpleasant Experience with a Prisoner.

As Officer Jacobs was on his beat last evening he met Charles Gould in what he considered an intoxicated condition and ordered him to go home. Instead of following the officer's advice he started off in the opposite direction, whereupon he was overhauled and arrested on Middle street by Officer Jacobs, who called the patrol wagon. As they were seated in the wagon the policeman's attention was called for a moment to some one on the sidewalk, his back being turned to Gould. When he faced about he was confronted by a large English bull dog revolver in the hand of Gould, a sight which would make any man's blood chill in his veins.

Equal to the occasion, however, Jacobs quick as thought seized the revolver with one hand and Gould's throat with the other, the latter proceeding giving the arrested man such discomfort that he relinquished the weapon and was taken to the station and locked up. It was found that the revolver was a self-cocking one and a dangerous article when loaded, as was the case. It is probable that Officer Jacob's quickness saved him a serious wound, if not worse. Gould will probably be up before the court to-day. He is said to be a candy maker at Bragg, Cummings & Co's.

SCRATCHED 28 YEARS

A Scaly, Itching, Skin Disease with Endless Suffering Cured by Cuticura Remedies.

If I had known of the CUTICURA REMEDIES twenty eight years ago, it would have saved me $200 00 and an immense amount of suffering My disease (psoriasis) commenced on my head in a spot not larger than a cent. It spread rapidly all over my body, and got under my nails. The scales would drop off of me all the time, and my suffering was endless, and without relief. One thousand dollars would not tempt me to have this disease over again. I am a poor man, but feel rich to be relieved of what some of the doctors said was leprosy, some ringworm, psoriasis, etc. I cannot praise the CUTICURA REMEDIES too much. They have made my skin as clear and free from scales as a baby's. All I used of them was $5 worth. If you had been here and said you would have cured me for $200 00, you would have had the money. I looked like the picture (No 2, page 47) in your book, "How to Cure Skin Diseases," but now I am as clear as any person ever was. Through force of habit I rub my hands over my arms and legs to scratch once in a while, but to no purpose. I am all well. I scratched twenty eight years, and it got to be a kind of second nature to me. I thank you a thousand times

DENNIS DOWNING, Waterbury, Vt.

Not in the memory of man has there been better skating on the river than there was yesterday The slight depth of water on the ice froze and, yesterday, there was a smooth, glassy surface which was resorted to by large crowds of skaters, who indulged in the pastime to their heart's content. Portions of the river were almost black with the swarm of humanity.

A GOLDEN WEDDING. A pleasant event at South Brewer last evening was the celebration by Mr and Mrs Willis Patten of their golden wedding. They reside at No. 4 Elm street and at the appointed hour a large number of guests, including friends and relatives in this city, from Bangor and from Massachusetts, was present. Delicious refreshments consisting of ice cream from M. E. Maling's establishment, cake and coffee were served and the evening was made an enjoyable one for all. Mr. and Mrs Patten received the congratulation of all and the best of wishes for the future. They were made many beautiful and valuable gifts, marks of esteem in which the givers hold them. Mr. Patten has been for many years a surveyor and has lived at South Brewer for a long time. His wife was Miss Hannah Sterns, of Bangor. They have had one child, Mr. George W. Patten, a well known business man of this city.

TO PATCH UP THE UMBRIA.

Captain Jones Flatly Contradicts Captain McKay.

Not until the Umbria again reaches the other side of the Atlantic will her fractured shaft be replaced with a new one. While she lies at her pier here the Umbria's old shaft will be stripped of the bolts and keys which held it together on the stanch ship's memorable voyage, and a new, but more elaborate method, will be adopted to bring the ragged edges together and to hold them firmly in place. Agent Vernon H. Brown and Captain McKay thought at first that it would be necessary to send to England for the Umbria's duplicate thrust shaft, which lies in the shipbuilding yards of John Elder & Co., where the Umbria was built. A shaft as good as any that was ever forged could be turned out on this side of the Atlantic inside of three weeks, but it is difficult to make English steamship companies believe it.

The transportation of a thrust shaft the size of the Umbria's is attended with as much labor as the shipment of an Egyptian obelisk, and it has practically been decided to simply repair the Umbria's shaft again and wait until she reaches the other side before permanent repairs are made. William Donaldson, one of the Umbria's crew, who was selected to assist in the work of patching up the steamship's shaft at sea, explained yesterday to a Morning Advertiser reporter the manner in which the shaft will be patched up

By means of powerful jacks and clamps the broken ends of the shaft will be brought together and braced. A series of six holes will then be drilled diagonally through the shaft at right angles to the break. The holes will be one and fourteen-seventeenths of an inch in diameter Bolts one-seventh of an inch larger will be forced into the holes. In addition to this the fastenings used by Chief Engineer Tomlinson, including the great "sling" which will keep the shaft from breaking through the ship in case of a breakdown, will be retained. The Umbria will be ready to sail again in about twelve days

Acting Captain Jones, of the steamship Galileo, which was the first to sight the disabled Umbria and reported that Captain McKay had absolutely declined assistance, made a statement yesterday to the effect that Captain McKay refused to take a tow of the Galileo. Captain McKay has said he was anxious to have the Galileo tow him, but that Captain Jones declined to do so.

"Here are the facts," said Captain Jones yesterday. "At 5 P. M. Sunday, a week ago, I made out the Umbria, apparently disabled, five miles away. Our course was altered four points, and I went around and to the leeward of the Umbria until I was half a mile distant. It was not prudent to come to a dead stop any nearer, as her drags were out and a heavy gale was on. Mind this; she had no signals of distress flying, and although it was dark was burning no torch forward as a signal that help was desired. She was simply lying there, and her officers aboard saw us approach. There was no indication that she needed help, and asked for none. I burned my night lamps telling them I was a Wilson Liner.

"It was not my place to offer help, although I was only too anxious to do all in my power, and went so far as to ask my second officer if he was willing to take a boat and go aboard the Umbria, so certain was I that she wanted assistance and would in time ask for it. I knew she was overdue, and I was willing to take her mails or some [illegible] to [illegible]. We

Aroostook.

Jerry Leen and Patrick O'Neil were on trial Friday morning accused with assault upon Joseph Bouchard and Alphonse Lavasser and held to answer to the Superior Court, Caribou, May term. They failed to find bonds in the sum of $300 and were ordered committed. Bouchard's skull is broken at the top.

Col. Charles P. Allen, of Presque Isle, has purchased Carrier Island, near Presque Isle, a very rich piece of land of some 125 acres. This gives him control of probably the largest intervale farm on the Aroostook river.

Cumberland.

Major H. A. Shorey, Sunday, completed his twenty-fifth year of service as editor and publisher of the Bridgton News.

Sheriff Cram, of Cumberland county, has re-appointed and sworn in Deputies Plummer, Sterling and Chute, for liquor deputies, and will immediately re-appoint all the civil deputies, except those at Sebago, Otisfield and Bridgton. Ex-Sheriff Webb, the Bridgton deputy declines re-appointment.

Mr. Llewellyn Barton, of Portland, will be a candidate for the position of State assessor, made vacant by the resignation of Hon. B. F. Chadbourne.

Hancock.

The house occupied by Frank Garland, at Ellsworth, was destroyed by fire Saturday morning. The fire caught from a defective chimney. The house was insured for $600.

Mrs. Jonathan Dow, of Deer Isle, eighty years old, has woven two hundred yards of rag carpeting and one hundred yards of cloth and knitted forty pairs of stockings during the past season, besides caring for a flock of hens and doing her general housework. Mr. Robbins is seventy-six years old and this year has made all the woodwork for four horse carts, one jigger, one double-seated wagon and one horse sled, besides repairing many carriage wheels and bodies.

Mrs. Joanna Bunker, of West Trenton, aged eighty-seven years, has recently cut and made a vest without the use of glasses.

Mrs. Lavinia Tibbets, of Brooksville, in her eighty-second year, one day this fall, put up the preserves and pickles, several different kinds of each, for the winter's use, doing all the work herself. She does nearly the whole of her housework herself.

Sagadahoc.

The New England Ship Building Company have just closed a contract to build a first-class passenger steamer for the Fall River Steamboat Company. The new boat is to be a propeller steamer, 110 feet in length over all, 23 feet wide and 7½ feet deep. Work will be begun at once and she will be ready for delivery very quickly.

Many Bath people believe it would be far preferable for the city to own and operate its electric light plant instead of paying a private corporation thousands of dollars annually for the lights. The city contracted with the company five years ago for street arc lights at $100 per year for five years. As that time is now up a committee has been appointed to ascertain the expense, etc, of lighting other cities throughout the State. In addition to paying $100 a year for each arc light the city pays $50 a year additional for lights that burn all night, and $210 per annum for lighting the city building.

The Sagadahoc lawyers are now puzzling over the Bath firebug. A youth of rather uncertain brain has been tried in the Supreme Court and convicted In his charge to the petit jury, Judge Libbey explained that if they felt convinced that the prisoner set the fires, but had not sufficient mental capacity to appreciate the nature of his act, they might so express themselves in their verdict. This was the view the jury did take, but in writing out the verdict they got things a little mixed, and reported, "Not guilty by reason of insufficient mental capacity." The intent of the jurors seems to be plain, but good lawyers hold that the man is acquitted, since he is "not guilty," the explanation following having no weight to change, since it may be only one of a number of reasons which induced them to find the prisoner not guilty. The county attorney holds that the man is really convicted, and proposes to fight for his sentence, but most of the lawyers believe that it will be useless.

Richmond Bee: A little girl was sent into a neighbor's house, the other evening, to borrow a copy of the Bee. She departed with the treasure but returned a few moments later with the request that the man of the house should lend her mother his spectacles. "Well, by George!" ejaculated the astonished citizen: "isn't that asking a little too much?" "No, indeed," answered the girl, "Mother says you won't need your glasses as long as she has your newspaper: you can spare them just as well as not." He spared them.

Washington.

On the flood tide, Wednesday of last week, the ice left Machias river taking three vessels with it. Four men went after them and at 5 P. M. they were all back in their old anchorage. One of them, the Charles Raymond, was injured by a collision with Para, and the waist broken, jib-stay and shrouds carried away. The men first rowed and then pulled their dories over the ice to the vessels.

Friday afternoon of last week, Millard, son of Albert Holmes, of East Machias, while attempting to get on a load of hay, after having had it weighed at the scales, lost his hold and fell to the ground. The horse became frightened and ran, the wheels of the wagon passing over young Holmes, breaking one of his legs. The young man was quickly carried to his home.

H. W. Hook, of Harrington, was on Christmas day the recipient of a purse of fifty dollars, contributed by the citizens of that village. The gift expresses the appreciation of the many acts of kindness he has rendered to the sick and the afflicted since he came to Harrington twenty years ago

York.

A petition is to be presented to the Legislatures of Maine and New Hampshire to allow the counties of York and Rockingham to purchase and maintain free the Portsmouth bridge.

Capt. Benjamin Thompson, of Kennebunkport, who celebrated his ninety-ninth birthday, Thursday, was found by a neighbor who called on him, out in the barn cutting wood. For years he has been accustomed to cut all the fire wood for the house. He says he was never sick enough to require the services of a doctor, and has not missed a meal since he can remember. He intends to visit the World's Fair next summer.

NUTRITIOUS FOOD.

Of all the salts connected with the vital processes, none are so important as the phosphates. They enter into the composition of the bones, muscles, nerves, brain, and wherever indeed an important function is to be performed, there is invariably present a supply of phosphates. They are present in all the forms of substantial food. If food be deficient in phosphates, it is less nutritious; this significance of the phosphates is a well-recognized physiological truth. Some forms of food vary in the amount of phosphates they contain; and in the separation of bran from flour we lessen its value as a source of nutritious food, in some degree proportioned to the phosphates which are withdrawn.

This fact attracted the attention of Professor Horsford, some years ago, and led to many researches and exhaustive experiments in the direction of providing for the restoration of the phosphates to [illegible]

KIDNAPPED.

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

"Well," said I, "what followed?"

Alan laid down his pipe, which he had long since suffered to go out, and set his two hands upon his knees.

"Aye," said he, "ye'll never guess that! For these same Stewarts, and Maccolls, and Macrobs (that had two rents to pay, one to King George by stark force and one to Ardshiel by natural kindness), offered him a better price than any Campbell in all broad Scotland; and far he sent seeking them—as far as to the sides of the Clyde and the cross of Edinburgh—seeking, and fleeching, and begging them to come, where there was a Stewart to be starved and a redheaded hound of a Campbell to be pleasured!"

"Well, Alan," said I, "that is a strange story, and a fine one too. And Whig as I may be, I am glad the man was beaten."

"Him beaten?" echoed Alan. "It's little ye ken of Campbells and less of Red Fox. Him beaten? No; nor will be till his blood's on the hillside! But if the day comes, David, man, that I can find time and leisure for a bit of hunting there grows not enough heather in all Scotland to hide him from my vengeance!"

"Man, Alan," said I, "ye are neither very wise nor very Christian to blow off so many words of anger. They will do the man ye call the Fox no harm, and yourself no good. Tell me your tale plainly out. What did he next?"

"And that's a good observe, David," said Alan. "Troth and indeed they will do him no harm, the more's the pity! And barring that about Christianity (of which my opinion is quite otherwise, or I would be nae Christian), I am much of your mind."

"Opinion here or opinion there," said I, "it's a kent thing that Christianity forbids revenge."

"Ah," said he, "it's well seen it was a Campbell taught ye! It would be a convenient world for them and their sort if there was no such a thing as a lad and a gun behind a heather bush! But that's nothing to the point. That is what he did"

"Aye," said I, "come to that"

"Well, David," said he, "since he could nae be rid of the royal commons by fair means, he swore he would be rid of them by foul. Ardshiel was to starve; that was the thing he aimed at. And since them that fed him in his exile would nae be bought out right or wrong, he would drive them out. Therefore he sent for lawyers and papers and redcoats to stand at his back And the kindly folk of that country must all pack and tramp, every [illegible]er's son out of his father's house, and out of the place where he was bred and fed, and played when he was a callant. And who are to succeed them? Bareleggit beggars! King George is to whistle for his rents; he maun dow with less; he can spread his butter thinner, what cares Red Colin? If he can hurt Ardshiel he has his wish; if he can pluck the meat from my chieftain's table, and the bit toys out of his children's hands, he will gang hame singing to Glenure!"

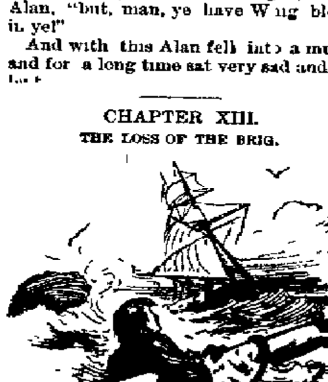

"Let me have a word," said I "Be sure, if they take less rents, be sure government has a finger in the pie. It's not this Campbell's fault, man—it's his orders And if ye killed this Colin tomorrow, what better would ye be? There would be another factor in his shoes as fast as spur can drive."

"Ye're a good lad in a fight," said Alan, "but, man, ye have Whig blood in ye!"

And with this Alan fell into a muse, and for a long time sat very sad and si[lent].

CHAPTER XIII.

THE LOSS OF THE BRIG.

It was the spare yard I had got hold of.

It was already late at night, and as dark as it ever would be at that season of the year (and that is to say it was still pretty bright), when Hoseason clapped his head into the roundhouse door.

"Here," said he, "come out and see if ye can pilot"

"Is this one of your tricks?" asked Alan.

"Do I look like tricks?" cries the captain. "I have other things to think of—my brig's in danger!"

By the concerned look of his face, and above all by the sharp tones in which he spoke of his brig, it was plain to both of us he was in deadly earnest, and so Alan and I, with no great fear of treachery, stepped on deck.

The sky was clear; it blew hard and was bitter cold, a great deal of daylight lingered, and the moon, which was nearly full, shone brightly.

Altogether it was no such ill night to keep the seas in, and I had begun to wonder what it was that sat so heavily upon the captain, when, the brig rising suddenly on the top of a high swell, he pointed and cried to us to look. Away on the lee bow a thing like a fountain rose out of the moonlit sea, and immediately after we heard a low sound of roaring.

"What do ye call that!" asked the captain gloomily.

"The sea breaking on a reef," said Alan. "And now ye ken where it is, and what better would ye have?"

"Aye," said Hoseason, "if it was the only one."

And sure enough just as he spoke there came a second fountain farther to the south.

"There!" said Hoseason. "Ye see for yourself. If I had kent of these reefs, if I had had a chart, or if Shuan had been spared, it's not sixty guineas—no, nor six hundred, would have made me risk my brig in sic a stoneyard! But you, sir, that was to pilot us, have ye never a word?"

"I'm thinking," said Alan, "these'll be what they call the Torran rocks."

"Are there many of them?" says the captain.

"Truly, sir, I am nae pilot," said Alan, "but it sticks in my mind there are ten miles of them."

Mr. Riach and the captain looked at each other.

"There's a way through them, I suppose?" said the captain.

"Doubtless," said Alan; "but where? But it somehow runs in my mind once more that it is clearer under the la[nd] [illegible]

"But where did I hear it? Well, well, it will be as it must."

As we got nearer to the turn of the land the reefs began to be sown here and there on our very path, and Mr. Riach sometimes cried down to us to change the course. Sometimes indeed none too soon, for one reef was so close on the brig's weatherboard that when a sea burst upon it the lighter sprays fell upon her deck and wetted us like rain.

The brightness of the night showed us these perils as clearly as by day, which was perhaps the more alarming. It showed me, too, the face of the captain as he stood by the steersman, now on one foot, now on the other, and sometimes blowing in his hands, but still listening and looking and as steady as steel. Neither he nor Mr. Riach had shown well in the fighting, but I saw they were brave in their own trade, and admired them all the more because I found Alan very white.

"Ochone, David," said he, "this is no the kind of death I fancy."

"What, Alan!" I cried, "you're not afraid?"

"No," said he, wetting his lips, "but you'll allow yourself, it's a cold ending."

By this time, now and then sheering to one side or the other to avoid a reef, but still hugging the wind and the land, we had got around Iona and begun to come alongside Mull. The tide of the tail of the land ran very strong and threw the brig about. Two hands were put to the helm, and Hoseason himself would sometimes lend a help; and it was strange to see three strong men throw their weight upon the tiller, and it, like a living thing, struggle against and drive them back. This would have been the greater danger had not the sea been for some while free of obstacles. Mr. Riach besides announced from the top that he saw clear water ahead.

"Ye were right," said Hoseason to Alan. "Ye have saved the brig, sir; I'll mind that when we come to clear accounts." And I believe he not only meant what he said, but would have done it, so high a place did the Covenant hold in his affections

But this is matter only for conjecture, things having gone otherwise than he forecast.

"Keep her away a point," sings out Mr. Riach. "Reef to windward!"

And just at the same time the tide caught the brig and threw the wind out of her sails. She came round into the wind like a top, and the next moment struck the reef with such a dunch as threw us all flat upon the deck, and came near to shake Mr. Riach from his place upon the mast.

I was on my feet in a minute. The reef on which we had struck was close in under the southwest end of Mull, off a little isle they call Earraid, which lay low and black upon the larboard. Sometimes the swell broke clean over us; sometimes it only ground the poor brig upon the reef, so that we could hear her beat herself to pieces, and what with the great noise of the sails, and the singing of the wind, and the flying of the spray in the moonlight, and the sense of danger, I think my head was partly turned, for I could scarcely understand the things I saw Presently I observed Mr. Riach and the seamen busy around the skiff, and still in the same blank ran over to assist them, and as soon as I set my hand to work my mind came clear again. It was no very easy task, for the skiff lay amidships and was full of hamper, and the breaking of the heavier seas continually forced us to give over and hold on, but we all wrought like horses while we could.

Meanwhile such of the wounded as could move came clambering out of the fore scuttle and began to help, while the rest that lay helpless in their bunks harrowed me with screaming and begging to be saved.

The captain took no part. It seemed he was struck stupid. He stood holding by the shrouds, talking to himself and groaning out aloud whenever the ship hammered on the rock. His brig was like wife and child to him. He had looked on day by day at the mishandling of poor Ransome, but when it came to the brig he seemed to suffer along with her.

All the time of our working at the boat I remember only one other thing—that I asked Alan, looking across at the shore, what country it was, and he answered it was the worst possible for him, for it was a land of the Campbells

We had one of the wounded men told off to keep a watch upon the seas and cry us warning. Well, we had the boat about ready to be launched when this man sung out pretty shrill, "For God's sake, hold on!" We knew by his tone that it was something more than ordinary, and sure enough there followed a sea so huge that it lifted the brig right up and canted her over on her beam. Whether the cry came too late or my hold was too weak I know not, but at the sudden tilting of the ship I was cast clean over the bulwarks into the sea.

I went down and drank my fill, and then came up and got a blink of the moon, and then went down again.

Presently I found I was holding to a spar, which helped me somewhat. And then all of a sudden I was in quiet water and began to come to myself.

It was the spare yard I had got hold of, and I was amazed to see how far I had traveled from the brig. I hailed her indeed, but it was plain she was already out of cry. She was still holding together, but whether or not they had yet launched the boat I was too far off and too low down to see.

While I was hailing the brig I spied a tract of water lying between us, where no great waves came, but which yet boiled white all over and bristled in the moon with rings and bubbles. Sometimes the whole tract swung to one side like the tail of a live serpent; sometimes for a glimpse it all would disappear and then boil up again. What it was I had no guess, which for the time increased my fear of it, but I now know it must have been the roost or tide race which had carried me away so fast and tumbled me about so cruelly, and at last, as if tired of that play, had flung out me and the spare yard upon its landward margin.

I now lay quite becalmed, and began to feel that a man can die of cold as well as of drowning. The shores of Earraid were close in. I could see in the moonlight the dots of heather and the sparkling of the mica in the rocks.

"Well," thought I to myself, "if I cannot get as far as that it's strange!"

I had no skill of swimming, Essen water being small in our neighborhood, but when I laid hold upon the yard with both arms and kicked out with both feet I soon began to find that I was moving. Hard work it was, and mortally slow, but in about an hour of kicking and splashing I had got well in between the points of a sandy bay surrounded by low hills.

The sea was here quite quiet, there was no sound of any surf, the moon shone clear and I thought in my heart I had never seen a place so desert and desolate. But it was dry land, and when at last it grew so shallow that I could leave the yard and wade ashore upon my feet, I cannot tell if I was more tired or more grateful. Both at least I was, tired as never was before [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to God as I
